It is a far-reaching question that is stated in these words, a question that goes right to the root of the life of our present-day merchant marine. For unless American ships can compete successfully with the ships of foreign nations, which still manage to dominate our own overseas carrying, there can be no future for ocean shipbuilding and navigation under the American flag. Therefore this question is one of as direct personal interest to naval architects and marine engineers of all grades and ratings in their profession as it is to the shipowners and managers themselves. The future livelihood and success of thousands of energetic and ambitious Americans hang upon a right solution of the problem of the ship in service. Three main causes well known to men of our maritime industry were responsible for the inability...
