With the light of this new purpose in his eyes, he looked infinitely more pleasant and boy-like than I had ever seen him look before, except after the affair at the Constables party. This was no light thing that he was asking. It was one N thing to be kind to him in the way in which Jack and I had been kind in the matter of the two half-sovereigns; but to undertake to help him in and out of school, as his words implied, was quite another affair. Poor fellow! with all his uncouth ways and unlovely looks, it was impossible not to see how earnest he was about gaining knowledge, and...
