O connor, His Voice and Pen: Being a Collection of Addresses, Speeches, Newspaper Articles, Etc., Emanating From the Above Source In these days of horseless carriages, wireless telegrams, heartless humans and thoughtless speech, it does not require much agility or a great stretch of the imagination to jump back a quarter of a century - in fancy. Close then your eyes and take the leap with me. The time, 1879 - the place, the old Academy building in the Fifth Ward of sacred memory - to John Brandegee, who still clings, and to His Honor, Mayor Talcott, and to myself, who in days of old clung to residences in that bailiwick with as much tenacity as did ever Michael O Rourke, Dan Shadrach, Couchy Meyers, Cale Dunn or John Davy Hackett. My, how the memories crowd! First comes the thought of Friday afternoon rhetorical, and how soon every sixth week did roll around. A harsh, strident voice rasps out, And the rider of that black horse was Benedict Arnold. Poor old black horse,...
